Chickasaw Elders HOMELAND TOUR

For five days, a group of Chickasaw elders observed their rich cultural heritage and explored significant historic sites in Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee.

The inaugural Elders Homeland Tour took place in April with 18 Chickasaw elders and 12 companions in attendance. Each stop, from the revered Piominko statue in Tupelo, Mississippi, to the poignant Chokka' Falaa' monument, offered a chance to honor their ancestors and celebrate their identity.

Toni Walker of Mill Creek, Oklahoma, was among those on the first tour.

"That was my first time to go and it was very educational," Walker said. "We learned about the mounds that were established, how they were built, and saw historical monuments."

Attendees used this time to strengthen their connection with the Chickasaw Homeland and meet other Chickasaws.

Sandra Williams traveled from Texas to attend the second tour that took place in September. Her most memorable moments were seeing the Piominko statue and visiting the mounds. “The third mound we visited was very serene and I felt a connection to our ancestors,” Williams said.

“Being with other Chickasaws, it felt like a homecoming; a reunion,” Williams said.

Chickasaw elders 60 years of age or older can participate in the Chickasaw Elders Homeland Tour. An elder is only required to submit one application for consideration of future tours. Two Homeland tours take place each calendar year, with elder applications being selected at random.
